

Ask for Time Before You Answer

A thoughtful review is part of a professional decision—not a sign of weak interest.

THE DECISION

An offer often arrives after an intense process. Before accepting, declining or negotiating, give yourself enough time to read the details, identify missing information and compare the role with your stated priorities.

THREE MOVES

→ Thank the employer, express interest where it is genuine, and ask when they need a considered response.

→ Review the written offer rather than relying on memory from a call.

→ Speak with a trusted advisor who can challenge your assumptions without deciding for you.

TRY THIS BEFORE YOUR NEXT STEP

Before replying, list the five questions you still need answered. If an answer is important to your decision, ask for it in writing.
